BIG BUSINESS

"GENERAL," said the Dunce one morning after the General had eaten a good breakfast, which usually puts him in the best of humor, "the Sailor, Gogo and I want to go into business."

"That's a very good idea," agreed the General, "provided it doesn't interfere with your regular Teenie Weenie duties."

"OH, NO!" said the Dunce quickly. "We won't let our business stop our share of the village work. We have formed a business to be called the Teenie Weenie Candy Co. We expect to build a store and start business as soon as possible."

"You'll have to find your own supplies," cautioned the General.

"We're going to get our sweet from white clover," said the Dunce. "Then we expect to make candy bars and Teenie Weenie caramels."

The three partners chose a spot near the shoe house for their store, but due to the shortage of lumber the little men were delayed in their venture. They couldn't find a single berry basket in the neighborhood. The thin strips of wood used in berry baskets make the best of Teenie Weenie lumber and when that could not be had the little men began to search for something else. Finally they found a paper cream container which some big person had thrown away. "That will make a dandy store," said the Dunce. "It is coated with wax and that will make it rainproof."

Several of the Teenie Weenie men were hired for a certain number of candy bars to help with the work, and the container was rolled up to the chosen place on lead pencils. After it was well scrubbed, the little workmen set to work cutting a door and windows in the container. The Lady of Fashion promised to make curtains for the candy shop and the Teenie Weenie Doctor announced that he would give medical care to any devoted customer who became ill.

The use of the cream container suggested to the merchants a change in the name of the business.

They called a meeting of directors and changed the name from the Teenie Weenie Candy Co. to the Teenie Weenie Cream Shop. There was a great deal of suspicion among the older Teenie Weenies that the candy shop would have a very short life. Because, as the Policeman pointed out to the General, "The Dunce will eat up all the candy before the public has a chance to buy it. The only way those boys can make a success out of the business is to put a padlock on the Dunce's mouth so he can't eat."
